<td>Greeley Treasure Chest Program</td>
<td>The Greeley Treasure Chest Program is an early language and emergent literacy development program for children and their caregivers. The program is run by UNC graduate clinicians in the Speech-Language Pathology Program. A graduate clinician partners with one family for biweekly, play-based sessions based on an early intervention model. The clinician will demonstrate speech and language strategies through play at SEVA House. Each family will take a different “Treasure Chest” box home filled with developmentally appropriate, educational toys and books to practice the strategies learned during the session.</td>

| SAFY of Colorado | SAFY of Colorado provides multigenerational, trauma informed treatment services for youth and their families. Working with all types of families, we provide individualized work with caregivers targeted towards helping them understand their youth’s challenges, symptoms, and behaviors, and brainstorm new ways to work with their youth in ways that are more effective. In addition, clinicians work with youth individually on building emotion identification and regulation skills, as well as building the child’s resiliency. When ready, clients have the opportunity to engage in full family system sessions to address communication challenges, symptom management and connection building. Online at www.safy.org.

| Union Colony Children's Music Academy | Music classes at UCCMA are designed with a keen understanding of how children learn, in both a general sense and, specifically, how they learn music. Classes nurture the child’s music aptitude by engaging children and their families in singing and movement activities that help attune the ear, refine the voice, and develop a rhythmic body through which music can be expressed. Additionally, instrumental activities are part of the program, ranging from playing simple rhythm instruments such as sticks and drums for babies and toddlers to playing keyboards, ukuleles and guitars for older children. UCCMA is a nonprofit 501c3 organization, which works to make our program available to all children. We provide scholarships as available and offer outreach classes throughout the community.
